1. Conduct board training once a year, whether you have new board members or not. It's amazing how the "basics" helps to ground and integrate the knowledge and understanding of even highly experienced board members. Recurring training also helps to ensure that board members are all "working from the same script". 2.

Step outside your work brain a moment and think about athletic teams. In some sports it's obvious what each team member's job is: on a track and field team, the shot-putters job is to be awesome at shot-put; on a baseball team, each player's role is discernible by virtue of whether they stand at the pitcher's mound, first base, center field, etc.
